Autoplay Slot Feature

Once you've activated it, the machine will play through spins over and over again, showing you the results and then moving on to the next spin.

In order to take advantage of this feature, you'll first have to set up exactly how you want it to work.

Obviously, setting a loss limit protects you against blowing your whole bankroll through a string of very bad luck, but the winning stop can be important, too:

there's nothing more frustrating than watching yourself picking up some big wins, only to then see it all slip away when you would have been happy to cash out your winnings.

Another possibility for this option is when you see a large progressive jackpot and you want to have the best possible chance of winning the prize.

If you're trying to have the most fun possible, this isn't the way to go

That's fine if speed is your main concern, but it really takes away the drama, tension, and fun that comes with anticipating every spin and enjoying the graphics, videos, and sounds seen on many modern machines.

That's because it's optional, so it adds nothing but value: if you want to use it, go ahead; if it's not for you, just ignore it.
